National Fund for Acquisitions

Introduction

The National Fund for Acquisitions (NFA), provided by the Scottish Government to the Board of Trustees of National Museums Scotland, contributes towards the acquisition of objects for the collections of Scottish museums, galleries, libraries, archives and other similar institutions open to the public. The Fund can help with acquisitions in most collecting areas including objects relating to the arts, literature, history, natural sciences, technology, industry and medicine. Decisions on grant applications are made following consultation with curatorial staff at National Museums Scotland, the National Galleries of Scotland and the National Library of Scotland who provide expert advice to the Fund.

Funding

The annual grant from the Scottish Government for 2017/18 was £150,000. During the year the National Fund for Acquisitions made 48 payments totalling £129,085 to 29 organisations. This included payment of grants which had been offered but not yet claimed at the end of the previous financial year. At 31 March 2018, a further 13 grants with a total value of £43,483 had been committed but not yet paid. The total purchase value of the objects to which the Fund contributed was £367,740.

The Fund supported acquisitions for collections throughout Scotland, covering museum services in 17 of Scotland's 32 local authority areas, including 13 local authority museum services, 10 independent museums and 6 university collections.

Acknowledgement

In partnership with our funder, the Scottish Government, we have introduced a logo to be used on all publicity and display associated with acquisitions supported by the National Fund for Acquisitions. Use of the logo will celebrate the work of the Fund, encouraging participation and demonstrating how and where this public funding is spent. The logo and guidance on how to use it can be downloaded from our webpage:

Applications Received

During the year the Fund received 57 new applications. Where possible we try to give a decision on applications within fifteen working days; this was achieved for 74% of the applications received. Six applications were unsuccessful; one application was turned down for funding, two applications were withdrawn and three successful applications failed because the applicants were outbid at auction.

Seven of the acquisitions supported by the NFA were also supported by other funding bodies; four were supported by the Art Fund, one was supported by the Beecroft Bequest, one was supported by both the Art Fund and the Beecroft Bequest and one was supported by the Art Fund and the Heritage Lottery Fund.

The average grant value was £2,689, significantly higher than the figure of £2,055 for the previous year, while the average value of grants per organisation was £4,451, again higher than the figure of £4,384 for the previous year. The table below shows the distribution of funds by value of individual grants. The second table shows the distribution of grants by amount awarded to each organisation.

Fine Art

A total of 14 grants worth £53,097 were awarded to 14 organisations for the acquisition of fine art.

The Black Watch Castle and Museum acquired a preparatory oil sketch by Robert Gibb (1845–1932) for the finished composition Forward the 42nd which is now in the collection of Glasgow Museums. This famous painting, exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1899, depicts the Battle of the Alma on 20 September 1854, during the Crimean War. The oil sketch shows the 42nd Highlanders (the Black Watch) attacking on the right of the Allied positions towards the end of the battle during which Sir Colin Campbell, leading the Highland Brigade, gave the famous order ‘Forward the 42nd!’ The acquisition helps to tell the story of one of the most important events in the history of the regiment, marking their first action since the Battle of Waterloo in 1815.

The Hunterian acquired a pastel and chalk drawing by James Kay (1858-1942) depicting the Glasgow International Exhibition of 1901. A contemporary of the Glasgow Boys, Kay was born on the Isle of Arran and studied at Glasgow School of Art. He exhibited at the Paris Salon for the first time in 1894 and continued to work and exhibit in Paris and elsewhere on the Continent, creating artworks which demonstrate his awareness of continental art movements. The Glasgow International Exhibition highlighted the growth of art, industry and science during the 19th century and demonstrated the city's progressive, outward-looking character. The Hunterian holds a strong collection of works by Scottish artists relating to the exhibition; this pastel by Kay is a significant addition, its medium offering a fresh and vibrant response to this contemporary theme.

The University of Edinburgh and the Scottish Maritime Museum each acquired sculptures by Ian Hamilton Finlay (1925–2006), a Scottish artist with an international reputation whose sculpture garden in the Lanarkshire hills, Little Sparta, is widely regarded as one of the most important in the world. Four Blades, acquired by the University of Edinburgh, a slate sculpture dating from 1987 created in collaboration with Nicholas Sloan (b1951), embodies the history, politics and imagery of the French Revolution, a central theme in Finlay's art. The blades refer to the guillotine; engraved on each one are quotations from Diderot, Poussin, Robespierre and Finlay himself which explore the complex interplay between rational enlightenment and the terror which the instrument evokes. This is one of the most significant works to be acquired for the University's Modern and Contemporary Art Collection and relates well to the teaching at the University where Finlay's work features in undergraduate and postgraduate courses across several disciplines.

Another major theme in Finlay's art, shipping and the sea, is reflected in the Scottish Maritime Museum's acquisition of a bronze sculpture, Chrysalis, dating from 1996, created in collaboration with John Brazenall (b1956). A bronze ship's propeller in a bronze 'crate' on top of a stone plinth, the work refers to Scotland's shipbuilding industry and was acquired as part of the SMMart project, funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund, which is developing the museum's collection of fine art relating to Scotland's maritime heritage. The expanded collection will play a vital role in interpreting the museum's Recognised Collection of vessels and maritime culture, including the Denny Ship Model Experiment Tank, the museum's site at Dumbarton, which was used to test the stability of hull and propeller designs.

Continuing the maritime theme, Leisure and Culture Dundee acquired a charcoal drawing by John Bellany (1942–2013), signed and dated 1981, which relates to The Lovers, an oil painting acquired with NFA funding in 1981 for the museum's Recognised Collection of fine and applied art. The drawing depicts Bellany and his second wife, Juliet Lister, in the guise of a puffin and a seagull, aboard the vessel Mizpah. The name, given to an Eyemouth fishing boat, was taken from the book of Genesis in a reference to the Lord watching over a couple when apart. The couple's complex emotional relationship was a regular theme in Bellany's work during this period.

East Dunbartonshire Leisure and Culture Trust acquired a collection of 60 linocut prints by Willie Rodger (b1930) for the Lillie Art Gallery collection. A retrospective exhibition of Rodger's work, celebrating his 75th birthday, was held in 2005 at the Trust's Auld Kirk Museum in the artist's home town of Kirkintilloch. However the Trust's collection did not contain any works by this important local artist who, in 1989, became the first printmaker to be elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. This significant collection was selected in close collaboration with the artist. Read about the acquisition in our blog post by the Trust's Museums Development Officer, Peter McCormack:

Applied Art

The Fund made three grants worth £21,950 to three organisations for the acquisition of applied art. Glasgow Museums acquired a private collection of books with covers and illustrations by Jessie M King (1875–1949). This important collection of over 350 works includes limited editions and unique or rare works by King as well as book covers by contemporary artists associated with the Glasgow Style or the teaching of book design and illustration at Glasgow School of Art. King was one of the most commercially successful of the Glasgow Style designers and illustrators. Trained at Glasgow School of Art, where she was a contemporary of Charles Rennie Mackintosh (1868–1928) and the Macdonald sisters, Margaret (1864–1933) and Frances (1873–1921), she went on to teach there, influencing the next generation of artists in book and ceramic decoration. Although she worked in a wide range of media, King's focus was primarily on book illustration where she won international recognition. The collection includes King's cover design for L'Évangile de L'Enfance de Notre Seigneur Jesus Christ which won a gold medal at the Turin International Exhibition of Modern Decorative Art in 1902. The certificate awarded to King is owned by Glasgow Museums together with extensive collections of her work, including metalwork, painted ceramics, costume and textiles and works on paper.

Aberdeen Art Gallery and Museums acquired a silver and enamel tea strainer, 1966, and box, 1974, designed by Norman Grant (1943–2017). Born in Forres, Aberdeenshire, Grant trained at Gray's School of Art, initially in graphic design before moving into silversmithing. The Four Seasons Box is one of only two known examples of this design while the tea strainer was Grant's diploma piece and therefore a very early example of his work. These pieces join other designs by Grant in the collection, including silver and enamel jewellery acquired with NFA funding in 2015. The collection is strengthened by Grant's archive which he donated to the museum and which contains the original drawings for the tea strainer.

The museum also acquired a pair of silver serving spoons sold by Liberty & Company, London, the leading British commercial retailer of Arts & Crafts, Aesthetic and Art Nouveau design in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Liberty worked with a number of British designers who created original designs for the company, including Archibald Knox (1864–1933) who became their primary designer and was largely responsible for the Cymric line of silverware. The acquisition joins a number of objects in the collection associated with Liberty and provides further context for the existing collection of metalwork from the period, including a pair of forks designed by Charles Rennie Mackintosh.

Medals

The Fund made five grants with a total value of £17,553 for the acquisition of medals. The Royal Scots Dragoon Guards Museum acquired a Waterloo medal awarded to Captain and Brevet Major Edward Hawkins Cheney, 2nd Royal North British Horse (Scots Greys), who took part in the charge of the regiment at the Battle of Waterloo on 18 June 1815. Cheney commanded the regiment for the last three hours of the battle following the death or wounding of the other senior officers. The medal joins the most iconic and important exhibits in the museum's collection, the Imperial French Eagle and standard of the French 45th Line Regiment, captured at the battle by Sergeant Charles Ewart. Find out more about this acquisition in our blog post by Royal Scots Dragoon Guards Museum Curator, Edwin Rutherford: nationalfundforacquisitions.wordpress.com/captain-edward-hawkins-cheney/

Royal Burgh of Lanark Museum acquired two gold medals awarded to the American aviator John Armstrong Drexel (1891–1958) who set a world altitude record at the First International Aviation meeting held at Lanark Racecourse, 6–13 August 1910. The event, organised by the Royal Burgh of Lanark and Glasgow City Council, attracted over 215,000 spectators. Twenty-two aviators from Britain, the Continent and as far afield as America and Peru competed and generous cash prizes were awarded for long distance and cross-country flight, speed, altitude, weight carrying and delivery of dispatches. Drexel achieved an altitude of 6,595 feet in his Blériot monoplane, setting a world record. The medals are an important addition to the museum's collection of material relating to this significant event in the town's history.

Treasure Trove

The National Fund for Acquisitions made 20 grants with a total value of £17,602 for the acquisition of objects allocated to museums by the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer as part of the Treasure Trove system. Fife Cultural Trust acquired an unusual ring found at Cardenden, dating from the late 16th or early 17th centuries. Made of gold with glass and amethyst settings in the shape of a flower and white enamel decoration, this is the first ring of its kind to be found in Scotland, the assumption being that its loss meant it avoided being melted down and its gems repurposed in a later, more fashionable design.

The Orkney Museum acquired a fragment of a Pictish cross slab which was spotted eroding from a cliff face at Deerness. One face bears interlace design and an S-dragon while the other has depictions of two Pictish beasts. This is one of only three Pictish cross slabs known from Orkney.

Other Notable Acquisitions

The National Trust for Scotland acquired an octagonal ebonised occasional table with penwork decoration and a walnut corner cabinet, c1880, by Daniel Cottier (1837–1891). The furniture was acquired for Holmwood House, a suburban villa on the south side of Glasgow designed by Alexander ‘Greek’ Thomson (1817–1875) and built in 1857-8 for the businessman James Coupar. An interior decorative scheme, carried out by Cottier around ten years after the house was built, has not survived. The National Trust for Scotland is recreating historic paint schemes in the house and this acquisition is part of an initiative to develop the furniture collection with pieces which relate to the original contents.

The University of Glasgow Library acquired a letter written in 1887 by James McNeill Whistler (1834–1903) to Claude Monet (1840–1926), encouraging him to exhibit with the Royal Society of British Artists. Whistler’s entreaty to ‘send two or three of your beautiful canvases, so gay with colour – so that I can have some notes of joy on the walls of my Galleries this winter’ met with success and Monet exhibited four paintings in the society’s winter exhibition in 1887-8. Whistler was president of the society and his leadership did much to raise its profile, attracting artists such as his friend Monet to the society’s exhibitions. Whistler was instrumental in the granting of Royal status by Queen Victoria in 1887 and he alludes to this by annotating the printed letterhead with the words ‘The Royal’. The University of Glasgow is an unrivalled centre for the study of Whistler’s life and art and holds the largest single collection of his correspondence. Although the collection contains fourteen letters from Monet to Whistler, including one which is believed to be Monet’s reply to this letter, this is the first letter from Whistler to be added to the correspondence.

Glasgow Museums acquired a collection of ten photographs dating from the 1960s by photographer and filmmaker Oscar Marzaroli (1933–1988). Born in Italy, Marzaroli moved to Scotland with his parents at the age of two. He attended Glasgow School of Art and his work captured working-class life in the city and the radical social and urban changes which took place in the post war period. Among the photographs acquired are images relating to the demolition of tenements and the building of the Red Road flats which replaced them. There are also photographs of the artist Joan Eardley in her Townhead studio, the Samson children who were her subjects and the Scottish Cup Final at Hampden Park in 1965. The photographs provide important context for a wide range of Glasgow Museums' collections, including social history, Scottish art and the Red Road flats legacy collection.

Leisure and Culture Dundee acquired a cotton shirt and trouser suit by Stella McCartney (b1971), part of a range of clothing designed in partnership with Dundee publishers D C Thomson. The suit, printed with characters from The Dandy comic, including Dinah Mo, Cuddles & Dimples and Korky the Cat, was acquired in 2017, the 70th anniversary of the comic's first issue.
